

Dear Reader,

Thanks for visiting the Making Believe on Paper website. The pages of this website contain material that will both augment and extend the ideas and strategies I shared in the book.

Learning is an organic process. I've continued to develop additional effective teaching tools, mentor texts, and new knowledge about how to teach the fiction genre to primary students. The website will fill you in on what has been going on with me and my students since the book was completed.

Even though the book has just been published, I've shared the text with many of my close teaching friends and colleagues. They had a few suggestions and ideas that came in just a bit too late to include in the first edition. I've included their new ideas and excellent suggestions for you and your students to benefit from.

I've also collected, abstracted, summarized, and otherwise listed a number of the concepts, templates, lesson ideas, drawing lessons that were included in Making Believe on Paper. I've tried to organize and present the information in a way that will be easy for you to download, print, and share with your students on Monday.

I'd love to hear from you: your ideas, struggles, successes, etc. I'd also love to hear how the book is working for you and what other information I could include on the website that would be of benefit to you and your students.

So, thanks again for visiting me. Look around and see what breadcrumbs you can gather.

Jack DeMiller
